1. Introduction

Pick a Pakora is a quick-service food brand built around one idea: take the most loved street snack in Pakistan and give it the variety, hygiene and presentation of a modern food court brand. We were the first outlet in Islamabad to offer a full menu of pakora varieties under one name.

Our first outlet opened on 3 March 2016 on the 7th floor food court of Safa Gold Mall, Jinnah Super, Islamabad. From day one the concept drew strong response from customers, referrals and the mall management, both for the idea and for the quality offered at the price point.

The Safa Gold outlet was closed when the Capital Development Authority shut down the mall's food court, not because of the business itself. Since then the brand has been dormant but not forgotten, and we have used the time to rebuild it properly.

Why now

Islamabad's customers are brand conscious and expect the whole experience, not just the food. We are not returning with the same outlet. This relaunch brings:

- A redesigned identity: new logo, colours and packaging built for signage, social media and delivery apps.
- A new menu with more variety, new recipes and a rotating Today's Special that keeps regulars coming back.
- Improved taste and consistency, with recipes reworked and standardised so every order is the same.
- A digital-first marketing plan for a 2026 audience, alongside the in-mall activity that worked for us before.

A busy retail location with the right family and youth mix is the natural home for this. Pakora is an impulse buy and a shared snack, and the brand is now built to sit comfortably beside established food and retail names.

2. Company profile

Pick a Pakora is an Islamabad-based food brand, owned and managed locally. The founding team ran the Safa Gold outlet from 2016 and is leading the relaunch.

Key facts: brand founded 2016 · first outlet Safa Gold Mall, Islamabad · registered office 22E, First Floor, Service Road, F-11/1, Islamabad

3. Core value

High quality food at the most economical price possible. Every decision, from ingredients to packaging, is tested against that line. We would rather earn a customer twice a week than once a month.

4. Objective

To be the leading pakora brand in Pakistan, and the brand people think of first when they think of pakora. We introduced the concept in Islamabad in 2016. Our objective with this relaunch is to re-establish that position with a stronger product, then use it as the flagship for further outlets.

5. Core team

Our people are the product. The kitchen is run by home chefs with 10 years of cooking experience who care about hygiene, freshness and doing things properly, and the outlet is supported by a team covering operations, finance and supply chain.

For the Imtiaz Outlet, we are planning to have 1-2 helper(s) supported by two directors, with Zain Asif and Abdullah Liaqat overseeing management, quality, and hygiene to ensure standards are consistently maintained.

6. Raw material and equipment

- All ingredients are branded and sourced from approved suppliers to meet consistent quality and hygiene standards. We do not trade quality for price.
- Chutneys, batters and kachori fillings are prepared fresh daily from our own recipes.
- Flavoured soda syrups are sourced from specialist craft suppliers in Karachi (Thirsty, CO2 or One Degree).
- Frying is done in a commercial electric fryer with multiple independent slots so several orders cook at once, and veg and chicken items never share oil.
- Cold storage, prep, and holding equipment sized for a mall food court operation.

7. Process

We run a simple, strict process from supplier to customer:

- Procurement: branded, traceable raw material only, delivered on a fixed schedule.
- Prep: daily fresh prep with labelled, dated storage. Nothing is carried over beyond its shelf life.
- Cooking: every item is fried to order in front of the customer. Nothing sits under a heat lamp.
- Hygiene: caps, gloves and aprons for all staff, sanitised counters, and daily cleaning logs.
- Service: target order-to-hand time of under five minutes, tracked at the counter.
- Feedback: an open feedback board at the outlet, as we ran at Safa Gold, plus digital reviews.

8. Advancements

Within a short time of opening in 2016, Lipton approached us and we added Lipton tea and a range of green tea to the menu. We also ran Today's Special, a different pakora recipe each day, which became one of the most popular reasons to visit.

For the relaunch, we are building on that with:

- A larger core menu (see section 9).
- Today's Special, a rotating daily item, planned for the months following the opening once the core menu is running smoothly.
- Listing on food delivery platforms from launch.
- A loyalty and social media programme to convert first-time visitors into regulars.

9. Menu (tentative)

The menu below is the launch menu under development. Final items and prices will be confirmed before opening.

10. Today's Special

Photos from the Safa Gold outlet showing how Today's Special worked in practice: a chalkboard at the counter, a new recipe every day, and a served tray with chutneys. We plan to bring it back in the months after the new outlet opens.

11. Product pictures

12. Outlet and packaging

Our Safa Gold outlet in 2016, with the customer feedback board at the front, and our branded takeaway packaging. The new outlet will use the new identity throughout: signage, counter, uniforms, bags and boxes.

Pakora is carry-and-eat food, so packaging matters more than it does for a sit-down meal. We are introducing a friendly, unique disposable plate and holder that keeps the pakoras and chutneys together in one hand, looks good on social media, and is easy to carry around the mall.

15. Marketing and launch budget

Launch and marketing budgets will be finalised and shared once space availability is confirmed, so they can be allocated against the actual location, size and opening date. For reference, our 2016 launch was supported by a dedicated launch budget and a separate first-year marketing budget, and we will commit at least the same again for this outlet.

16. Our request

We are looking for a space to relaunch Pick a Pakora at Imtiaz Mega. A food court kiosk or an in-store counter of roughly 70-80 sq ft suits the concept, and we are open to discussing the format that fits the location best. We are ready to move quickly once a space is agreed: the brand identity, menu and supplier arrangements are already in place.

One requirement on the space itself: as a frying outlet, we need a unit with a proper exhaust system so that oil heat and smoke are vented out of the food court. This keeps the outlet, the neighbouring units and the customers comfortable, and it is the one thing we cannot work around.
